

The official website of Hokke Saburo, the Japanese Swordsmith

We are delighted to announce that the official website of Hokke Saburo has been launched. Hokke Saburo Nobufusa is a traditional and prominent Japanese swordsmith based in Miyagi prefecture in Japan. Miyagi was hugely affected by the disaster of the earthquake and tsunami on 11th March. Fortunately, there was no big damage to the local, the town of Matsuyama, Osaki city, where the Hokke family live, but the area is still in need of support. Before the quake, we were preparing our website, and now we are happy to launch and show it finally.

The Japanese swords used to be loved as charms and enchanted swords by many people, not only samurai, but also farmers. In Japan, people still order and buy a Japanese sword from Hokke Saburo as a lucky charm, a bride's household effect, a celebration of retirement and other special occasions.

You can purchase a sword or order your bespoke sword via our website or email.

The affected areas in the Northeast of Japan (Tohoku) have to rebuild our own town. We really appreciate that many people support us in various ways from all over the world. The reality of rebuilding the vast affected area would be tough, but we will not forget your warm regards and carry on step by step. It would be our great pleasure if this website would give people an opportunity to know more about Japanese swords, the Japanese swordsmiths and the Yamato tradition, which leads to understanding and supporting of Japanese tradition.
